The referendum took place Feb 28 2005 which resulted in support for the new constitution. And was signed into law March 19. Election took place July 4th 2005 with the CNDD-FDD won 59 seats and FRODEBU – 25, and Uprona – 10 seats in the national assembly 18 deputies were subsequently nominated. The CNDD-FDD, FRODEBU, UPRONA each received 5 seats leaving the CNDD-FDD a majority in the Assemblée of 13. Communal councilors participated in Senat elections on July 29. The CNDD-FDD won 30 seats the FRODEBU won the remaining 4. On Aug 19, the Assemblée nationale and the senat elected Nkurunziza as President. Nkurunziza was the only candidate with more than 81.5% of the votes and was sworn in on Aug 26. Nkurunziza appointed a 20 member council of minsters on Aug 30 2005. Nduwimana was the first VP. (Africa South 2012)

“Voters approved the proposed new constitution by a 92 percent margin in a national referendum on February 28, 2005, and in May most elements of the FNL finally agreed to a truce. Consequently, communal elections were held on June 3, with the CNDD-FDD (now a legal party) securing more than 55 percent of votes and more than 1,780 of the 3,325 seats up for election. The CNDD-FDD also dominated the July 4 assembly balloting, and CNDD-FDD leader Nkurunziza was elected president (as the sole candidate) with 91 percent of the votes cast during a joint session of the assembly and the Senate on August 19. In keeping with constitutional requirements, Nkurunziza appointed a Tutsi (Martin NDUWIMANA, from Uprona) as first vice president. Nkurunziza subsequently formed a new national unity government that included members from the CNDD-FDD, Uprona, Frodebu, Parena, and several small parties.” (Political Handbook)

The Europa World Year Book (2012) states “In November Nduwimana resigned from the Government, and was replaced by Yves Sahinguvu [also UPRONA]. Later that month Nkurunziza announced further changes to the composition of the Government, which included the appointment of Vénant Kamana, hitherto Minister at the Presidency, as Minister of the Interior” (p. 1081).

Cabinet 516-29-01-2009 (change in party composition unclear)

Announced: 29 January 2009

The Europa World Year Book’s entry for Burundi (2012) states that “In January 2009 Nkurunziza reorganized the Council of Ministers” (p. 1081). It specifically mentions that “Minister of the Interior Kamana was replaced by Edouard Nduwimana, formerly the governor of Kayanza province, while Augustin Nsanze was appointed Minister of External Relations and International Co-operation, replacing Antoinette Batumubwira” (p. 1081).

The Political Handbook of the World (2011) explicitly mentions that “The cabinet was reshuffled on January 29, 2009, although the constitutionally prescribed ethnic and party distribution of positions was again carefully followed” (p. 207).

Communal elections held in May 2010 were marred by opposition party accusations of fraudulent results. All major opposition parties withdrew from elections, and the five candidates who were registered to contest the Presidential election boycotted the polls. Presidential elections held in June 2010 re-elected Nkurunziza, as he was the sole candidate who participated in the election (Europa World Year Books (2012) p. 1082).

National Assembly elections followed in July 2010.

25 June 2010 opposition parties also declare a boycott of parliamentary elections set for 23 July 2010.

* Note: It is unclear whether this was carried out, but because there are seats that they won, it would appear that at least a portion of the opposition parties chose to run.

Announced: 7 November 2011

The Europa World Year Books (2012) description of this reorganization notes that “In early November 2011 Nkurunziza effected an extensive government reorganization, in which six new ministers were appointed. Notably, head of police Gabriel Nizigama was awarded the post of Minister of Public Security, while Laurent Kavakure, hitherto a senior presidential adviser, became Minister of External Relations and International Co-operation. Following the abolition of the Ministry of Planning for Economic Development, Minister of Finance Clotilde Nizigama assumed the additional portfolio” (p. 1082).

Cabinet Code 5: 9 November 2005 – 19 March 2007

Following presidential elections in July 2005, a mostly non-partisan government formed November 9, 2005, with some partisan representatives as well (comprising PAIGC (1 portfolio), PRS (5 portfolios), PCD (1 portfolio), PUSD (2 portfolios), and UE (1 portfolio)). Fully half of the ministerial posts - 10 portfolios - given to nonpartisan ministers (independents), including the PM.

Total portfolios: 20 on Aug 2006 (ASoS 2007, p. 593)

Sources:

“In the first round of presidential balloting on June 19, 2005, the PAIGC's Malam Bacai Sanhá received 35.45 percent of the vote, followed by Vieira (running as an independent) with 28.87 percent, and Yala of the PRS with 25 percent. Ten other candidates, representing 6 other parties and independents, each won less than 3 percent of the vote. Since Sanhá failed to gain a clear majority, he faced Vieira in a runoff on July 24. Several weeks later, Vieira was declared the winner with 52.35 percent of the vote. In August the Supreme Court rejected Sanhá's request to annul the election, and the PAIGC government finally conceded defeat on September 27. Amid continuing friction with Prime Minister Carlos Gomes, Vieira was sworn in on October 1, and on October 30 he dismissed the prime minister in favor of PAIGC dissident Aristides GOMES. On November 9 Vieira appointed a five-party coalition government comprising the PAIGC (split into pro-Vieira and pro-Carlos Gomes factions), the PRS, the PCD, the United Social Democratic Party (Partido Unido Social Democrata—PUSD), and the Electoral Union (União Eleitoral—UE). In early 2006, court rulings upheld the appointment of Aristides Gomes, striking down the PAIGC's argument that it was unconstitutional since Gomes had been suspended from the party (for his support of Vieira) and that the president was obligated to appoint a majority-party member to head the government.” (Political Handbook)

President Vieira appoints dissident member of PAIGC, Aristide Gomes, as PM to lead a coalition government comprising other PAIGC dissidents, PRS, PUSD, and some independent politicians. (Azevedo & Nijzink, 154) The government ends on March 19, 2007 when the government loses a vote of no confidence.

(https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Aristides_Gomes, http://www.ipu.org/parline-e/reports/arc/2133_08.htm)

“In March 2005 the government announced that presidential elections would take place in June 19. The presidential election was held as scheduled on Jun 19 2005 and a second round a voting took place July 24, where Vieira won with 52.4% of the votes. The results were upheld by the Supreme Court on Aug 19. On October 1, 2005 Vieira was sworn in as president however 2 weeks later 14 PAIGC members of parliament defected to join the two largest opposition parties the PRS& PUSD in a new coalition called the FCD (the forum de Convergence para o Desenvolvimento) this coalition wanted to remove the PM, Junior responded by requesting a vote of confidence but before the ANP could convene he and his government were dismissed by Vieira. On November 2 2005 Vieira appointed his ally and former PAIGC VP, Aristides Gomes as the new PM. One week later Gomes unveiled his new multi-party government comprising of 19 ministers and 9 secretaries of state drawn from the PRS, PUSD, UE & CD, together with several independents and 8 dissident members of the PAIGC. The min of econ, Issufo Sanha was the only one to retain his portfolio” (Africa South 2012)

Political Handbook - Following a parliamentary no-confidence vote on March 19, 2007, Prime Minister Aristides Gomes announced his resignation on March 29. On April 10 the president appointed a new prime minister, Martinho Ndafo CABI. On April 17 Cabi named a new government comprising members of the PAIGC, the PRS, and the PUSD (and only one minister from the previous government).

Africa South 2012 - In March 2007 a new political crisis erupted when the PRS and PUSD withdrew from the FCD ruling coalition and signed a political stability pact with the PAIGC. On March 19 the government lost a vote of no confidence in the ANP by 54 to 28 votes. On March 28 Gomes resigned as PM and Vieira appointed Martinho N'Dafa Kabi as PM who announced his new cabinet on April 17 with only 2 of the 20 ministers remaining from the previous admin. The new government heavily weighted in favor of the PAIGC & PRS whose parties held 9 and 6 cabinet posts respectively, however key portfolios were awarded to his supporters. On February 28 2008 the PAIGC announced the party would no longer support the government. [note that two other sources list a different allocation of portfolios]

- On April 9 President João Bernardo "Nino" Vieira appointed Martinho Ndafo Kabi, a former minister of defence, as the new prime minister. Kabi replaced Aristides Gomes who had resigned on March 29 after the National People's Assembly (the unicameral legislature) had passed a no-confidence motion against his government see pp. [47795-96; for previous government changes and full cabinet list see pp. 46917-18].
- Kabi was a vice president of the largest party in the Assembly, the African Party for the Independence of Guinea and Cape Verde (PAIGC), which had split into pro- and anti-Vieira factions following presidential elections in 2005 see pp. [46673; 46728; 46812; 46860-61; 46917-18]. Members of the pro-Vieira faction, including Gomes, had effectively been thrown out of the PAIGC and the party was regarded as the country's main opposition force. Kabi's appointment as prime minister was also supported by the Social Renewal Party (PRS) of former President Kumba Yalla and the United Social Democratic Party (PUSD) of former transitional Prime Minister Francisco Fadul.

- Kabi unveiled his new cabinet on April 18, which included eight members of the PAIGC, eight members of the PRS, and two members of the PUSD. Vieira retained one close ally in the new cabinet, Baciro Dabó, the former secretary of state for public order, who was appointed as interior minister.

Government ends July 26, 2008 when the PAIGC withdrew from the government. (2008-08-01 GUINEA-BISSAU Keesing's Record of World Events (Formerly Keesing's Contemporary Archives 1931-1988) Volume 54 (2008), Issue No. 12 (December), Page 48718)

Background information:

- Political Handbook - A number of opposition alliances were formed in 2002 in preparation for the December presidential and legislative balloting. In February several groups (including the DP, FORD-K, NCA, the United Democratic Movement (UDM), and a faction of FORD-A) launched a National Alliance for Change (NAC), which was later restyled as the National Alliance of Kenya (NAK) under the party registration for the National Party of Kenya (NPK). Concurrently, FORD-People, Safina, the Kenya National Democratic Alliance (KENDA), and others established the People's Coalition of Kenya (PCK), also sometimes referenced as the "Third Force for Change." In mid-October the NAK and PCK joined the newly formed Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) and its so-called "Rainbow Alliance" of former KANU and NDP faction leaders in an even larger opposition alliance called the National Rainbow Coalition (NARC), also referred to as the "Super Alliance." Moi in July 2002 selected Uhuru

- KENYATTA, the son of independence leader Jomo Kenyatta, as his preferred successor. However, public sentiment subsequently appeared to be turning solidly against KANU, which was expected to face a serious electoral challenge in December from a united opposition.
- On August 30, 2002, Moi dismissed Saitoti, who had earlier opposed Moi's selection of Kenyatta as his presidential successor. (The post remained vacant until November 4, when Moi appointed Wycliffe Musalia MUDAVADI from KANU as the new vice president.) In the meantime four cabinet ministers, including Odinga, resigned from the cabinet over Moi's selection of Kenyatta, and, with Saitoti, joined the opposition. Moi dissolved the assembly on October 26, 2002, prior to the elections and before it had an opportunity to review proposed changes to the constitution drafted by the constitutional review commission. Moi dissolved the constitutional commission the following day, and on October 28 he barred delegates from convening. The results of the presidential and legislative balloting on December 27, 2002, swept KANU out of power in a decisive victory for the "Super Alliance." The NARC presidential candidate, Mwai Kibaki, secured 62.3 percent of the vote, while Moi's handpicked successor, Uhuru Kenyatta, captured only 31.2 percent. The remaining three presidential candidates won less than 6.4 percent of the vote. In the legislative elections, the constituent parties of NARC captured a majority of 125 of the 210 elected seats. KANU finished second with 64 seats and became the official opposition party for the first time. Five other parties secured seats in the National Assembly.

Cabinet Code 7: 3 Jan 2003 - 30 Jun 2004

Political Handbook - President Kibaki was inaugurated on December 30, 2002, and had a cabinet in place by January 6, 2003. Vice President Michael Kijana WAMALWA died of a serious illness on August 23, 2003. Kibaki named Arthur Moody AWORI the new vice president on September 25, 2003.

Africa South 2012- "Presidential and legislative elections took place Dec 27 2002. The opposition secured an emphatic victory with Kibaki taking 62.3% of the votes cast in the presidential elections. The NARC securing 125 of the 210 elected seats in the National Assembly. KANU won 64 seats. In his first cabinet Kibaki appointed Michael Wamalwa as VP and Odinga as min of roads and public works, and housing. In Aug the VP died and Moody Awori was appointed as VP. In December Kaibaki offered 4 cabinet seats to KANU politicians in order to increase support for his fraction.

Sworn in: 6 January 2003 (The Political Handbook of the World (2011))

All ministers were from the NARC, which was an agglomeration of parties (LDP, DP, FORD-K, NPK) (African Elections, EISA). The coalition effectively collapsed after the elections, as the component parties had very little in common other than the desire to unseat the KANU (The Politics of Party Coalitions in Africa explains this in greater detail, and cites a lack of common ideology as one reason for the inability to cooperate). The Political Handbook of the World (2011) affirms this description in its extensive discussion of political parties (p.757).

The Political Handbook of the World (2011) states that the “15 opposition parties in the “Super Alliance” were held together by a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) signed before the December 2002 elections by the leadership of the constituent parties of the NAK and the LDP, who agreed, if victorious, to divide cabinet positions equally in consultation among the party leaders and to name the LDP’s Raila Odinga as prime minister once a new constitution was adopted” (p. 751).

Arriola (2013, p. 206) describes the distribution in a footnote: “According to the agreement specified in the memorandum between NAK and LDP, the latter was supposed to receive 13 ministers in a 22-member cabinet because Kibaki’s NAK held the presidency. This agreement, however, was not completely honored in the first post-election cabinet appointed by Kibaki: LDP received 9 ministerial appointments, while NAK received 16: 12 for Kibaki’s DP, 3 for Wamalwa’s FORD-K, and 1 for Ngilu’s NPK. Assistant ministers were more equitably divided ... Appointments to Kibaki’s cabinet were also regionally balanced: Central Province received 5 ministers, Eastern Province 5, Western Province 5, Rift Valley 4, Nyanza 3, Coast 2, and 1 each for North East Province and Nairobi.” The total of 25 tallies with the total given by Keesing’s, which includes both the VP and the AG.

“Newly elected President Mwai Kibaki appointed his first Cabinet on Jan. 3. Victory for Kibaki and his National Rainbow Coalition (NARC) in elections held in late December 2002 had brought to an end 24 years of rule by Daniel arap Moi and his Kenya African National Union (KANU) [see p. 45128]. The new Cabinet included a number of Kibaki’s opposition allies and high-profile defectors from KANU, although it was noted that the existing civil service structure remained unchanged and that Sally Kosgei, a trusted confidante of former President Moi, retained her influential position as permanent secretary to the Cabinet and head of the civil service. Michael Kijana Wamalwa, the champion of the Luhya ethnic group, Kenya's second largest, was appointed as the new Vice President.

The post of Finance Minister, regarded as central in a country plagued by corruption, went to David Mwiraria, a long-standing Kibaki loyalist. After announcing his Cabinet, President Kibaki promised to implement two anti-corruption bills that had been the focus of bitter discussion between the Moi government and the IMF. An IMF team met with Mwiraria and other senior officials on Jan. 15–17, after which the team issued a statement welcoming ‘the public commitment of the new administration to tackling corruption and strengthening governance’.”

Political handbook - In a bid to shore up support for his government in the face of bitter factional infighting among the major parties within NARC, President Kibaki reshuffled the cabinet on June 30, 2004, and formed a "government of national unity" by including key opposition party leaders, including members of KANU and FORD-People.

President Kibaki reshuffled the cabinet again on February 14, 2005, transferring some cabinet ministers and announcing a number of changes in the civil service in response to the mounting pressure from foreign governments. In the wake of the no-vote for the referendum on constitutional reform in November 2005, Kibaki dismissed his entire cabinet on November 23; 7 of the 28 cabinet ministers campaigned against the proposed constitution.

Africa South 2012-

A cabinet reorganization in June 2004 included KANU & FORD-People members in the new government to undermine the LDP.

"President Mwai Kibaki delivered an unscheduled address to the nation on June 30 in which he announced the formation of a "government of national unity" by appointing ministers from two opposition parties, the Kenya African National Union (KANU), the ruling party between 1963 and 2002, and the Forum for the Restoration of Democracy-People (FORD-People). Furthermore, analysts noted that the reshuffle appeared to marginalise the Liberal Democratic Party (LDP), a constituent party of the ruling National Rainbow Coalition (NARC). The East African Standard of July 1 reported that the LDP had recently been "conspiring to defeat government business". In the reshuffle, the senior LDP figure Kalonzo Musyoka was shifted from the Foreign Ministry to the less prestigious post of Environment and Natural Resources. All ministers were members of National Rainbow Coalition (NARC) unless otherwise stated.

Chirau Ali Makwere had been appointed as Minister of Labour and Manpower Development in a minor reshuffle carried out on June 19, 2003. In the same reshuffle, Konzolo Munyao had been appointed as Minister of Livestock and Fisheries Development.

Fourteen new assistant ministers were also appointed on June 30, four from KANU, two from FORD-People and the remainder from the NARC coalition partners (the LDP, the Forum for Restoration of Democracy-Kenya (FORD-Kenya), the Democratic Party of Kenya, and the National Party of Kenya).”

Cabinet Code 9: 8 January 2008 - 13 April 2008

Interim government formed (with some portfolio left empty in anticipation of a later agreement with ODM) on 8 January 2008 comprising PNU (15 portfolios, 43 78 leg seats) and ODM-K (2 portfolios, 16 leg seats).

Total portfolios: 17 (Keesings)

Political Handbook - President Kibaki was hurriedly sworn in for a second term on December 30. He installed a partial cabinet on January 8 and named Kalonzo Musyoka as vice president. Following protracted negotiations between Kibaki and the ODM's Raila Odinga over a power-sharing arrangement, Kibaki acquiesced in broad changes in the structure of executive power and agreed that Odinga would serve as the Kenya's first prime minister in an agreement signed on February 28.

Africa South 2012- Kibaki announced part of his cabinet in Mid-Jan 2008, which excluded the ODM from his government even though they had the majority.

Africa South 2012- On April 12 2008 Kibaki and Odinga announced an agreement where the cabinet would consist of 40 members and 52 assistant ministers with the PNU retaining the strategically importance, finance, foreign affairs, international security, roads and energy portfolios. On April 17 Odinga was sworn in as PM and Kenyatta was named Deputy MP and minister of trade and Wycliffe Musalia Mudavadi was appointed Deputy PM and minister of local government. Due to a few deaths and some results not immediately being made available by-elections were held on June 11 2008 following which the ODM had 102 seats and the PNU-45. When ODM's Kenneth Otiato Marende won Speaker of the National Assembly the ODM total was 103 seats. At the national referendum which took place Aug 4 2010 the draft of the constitution was approved by a clear majority.

The Europa World Year Book (2012) states that on 8 January 2008 Kibaki "announced the partial composition of his new Cabinet; despite the ODM having secured the largest number of seats in the legislature, no representatives from that party were included in the new Government" (p. 2593).

“The new, partial cabinet announced by President Kibaki on Jan. 8 was composed of members of Kibaki's umbrella grouping, the Party of National Unity (PNU). Kalonzo Musyoka, leader of the Orange Democratic Movement of Kenya (ODM-K), which had split from Odinga's ODM in August 2007 [see p. 48070], was appointed as vice president and minister for home affairs.”

“With Mr Kibaki naming only half of the cabinet, correspondents say the implication is that other posts are being left open for the outcome of negotiations. However, they say it is the key ministries that have been filled, leaving 15 remaining posts. Mr Kibaki named Kalonzo Musyoka, who came third in last month's election, as vice-president. The 17 cabinet members named include at least one other member of Mr Musyoka's party, as well as Uhuru Kenyatta, from the former ruling Kanu party. Mr Musyoka's Orange Democratic Movement-

Kenya split from Mr Odinga's party last year in a row over who should represent the party. While many former cabinet members lost their seats in the parliamentary elections, Mr Kibaki has retained several close allies from his Party of National Unity (PNU). They include Energy Minister Kiraitu Murungi, who has previously been sacked as a minister over a huge corruption scandal.” (<http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/africa/7177338.stm>)

Speaking at State House [Nairobi] where he witnessed the swearing in of newly-appointed Vice-President and Minister for Home Affairs Steven Musyoka and 16 other ministers, President Kibaki congratulated them and expressed confidence that they will serve Kenyans effectively.” (BBC Monitoring Africa – Political Supplied by BBC Worldwide Monitoring January 10, 2008 Thursday, “Kenyan president swears in new ministers”; <http://www.lexisnexis.com.ezaccess.libraries.psu.edu/hottopics/lnacademic/?verb=sf&sf=AC01NBSimplSrch>)

*Note: Articles (notably Keesing’s, The Political Handbook of the World (2011) and the Europa World Year Books (2012)) refer to this as having been announced as a “partial Cabinet” on 8 January 2008. It was nonetheless formally announced, and is included in the data.

Legislative seats Note: EISA includes the ODM-K as part of the PNU coalition. African Elections Database does not. Because the ODM-K ministers are listed separately in Keesing’s references, I count them separately. The lack of data on specific ministers and their parties within the PNU means that besides the ODM-K, ministers are attributed to the PNU as a whole (the PNU’s seats are aggregated from the component party seats). EISA does not include the NPK as part of the PNU coalition, but the African Elections Database does. I include the NPK in the PNU coalition (adds two seats to the legislative total).

This means that the final count, based on the AED data, for legislative seats attributes 78 to the PNU (and allies), and 16 to the ODM-K. We use these numbers in our analyses.

See http://www.ipu.org/parline-e/reports/arc/2167_07.htm for legislative election results.

Cabinet Code 10: 13 Apr 2008 – 4 Mar 2013

Following a power-sharing agreement between the PNU (15 portfolios) and the ODM (17 portfolios), both entered a new cabinet along with the ODM-K (3 portfolios) on 13 April 2008.

Total portfolios: 36 (including (NP) attorney general, excluding ministers of state; not counted in our figures.)

Political Handbook - On April 13 they jointly appointed a new, expanded cabinet, with 42 seats divided according to the strength of the two camps. The cabinet, the largest in Kenya's history, was sworn in on April 17.

Lands minister Kipkalya KONES died in an airplane crash on June 10. Finance Minister Amos KIMUNYA resigned on July 8 after a vote of nonconfidence passed several days before in the National Assembly. Kibaki reshuffled the cabinet on January 23, 2009, giving Deputy Prime Minister Uhuru Kenyatta the finance portfolio, bringing Amos Kimunya back into the cabinet as trade minister, and appointing a new minister for roads. Justice minister Martha KARUA resigned from the cabinet on April 6.

On August 16 there was a minor cabinet reshuffle. Following his indictment by the ICC, Kenyatta resigned his portfolio on January 26, 2012, but remained as deputy prime minister. The cabinet was reshuffled on March 25. The second deputy prime minister, Wycliffe Musalia MUDAVADI, left the ODM to join the UDF. He resigned his position as minister for local affairs on May 9 but retained his post as deputy prime minister.

Note: EISA includes the ODM-K as part of the PNU coalition. African Elections Database does not. Because the ODM-K ministers are listed separately in Keesing's references, I count them separately. "No party won an outright majority in the May 2012 elections. Outgoing Prime Minister Pakalitha Mosisili's Democratic Congress (DC) became the largest party with 48 seats. However, three smaller parties agreed to form the first ever coalition government in Lesotho: the All Basotho Convention (ABC, 30 seats), Lesotho Congress for Democracy (LCD, 26 seats) and the Basotho National Party (BNP, 5 seats). The DC was formed in February 2012 when Mr. Mosisili left the ruling LCD along with 44 other MPs, including Speaker Ntlhoi Motsamai."

- Following elections to the National Assembly (the unicameral legislature) held on May 26 see pp. [51083-84], King Letsie III on June 15 inaugurated a new cabinet comprising members of the new coalition formed on May 29 [ibid.], namely the former ruling Lesotho Congress for Democracy (LCD), which had won 26 Assembly seats, the former main opposition party, the All Basotho Convention (ABC), which had 30 seats, and three smaller former opposition parties, which had cumulatively secured nine seats. The largest number of seats (48) had been won by the Democratic Congress (DC), which had been formed as an offshoot of the LCD in February by the then Prime Minister Bethuel Pakalitha Mosisili see p. [50918].

- The new cabinet was headed by ABC leader, Thomas (Tom) Motsoahae Thabane, who was appointed as the new prime minister on June 8. Mohlabi Tsekoa was reappointed as minister of foreign affairs and Joang Molapo and Pinkie Rosemary Manamolela were appointed as ministers of home affairs and health, respectively, on June 25. Cabinet Code 12: 24 Sep 1994 – June 1996

New government begins on September 24, 1994 when AFORD joins UDF (and MNDP and UFMD with 1 portfolio each but no legislative seats) in government. UDF holds 19 portfolios (85 legislative seats), and AFORD holds 6 portfolios (36 legislative seats).

Government ends June 1996 when AFORD leaves government.

Total portfolios: 27 on Sept 1995 (excluding pres, including VP b/c hold other portfolios) (ASoS 1996, p. 584)

[Note: using 1995 rather than 1994 list, because the 1994 list had several vacancies, possibly before all the AFORD members joined.]

Bingu wa Mutharika, who had been elected as President in May see pp. [45990–91], appointed his first Cabinet on June 13 for previous government changes and full Cabinet list see p. [45332; for dissolution of Cabinet in February see p. 45833]. The Cabinet was dominated by Mutharika's United Democratic Front (UDF), which had performed relatively poorly in legislative elections also held in May [ibid.], but also included representatives of the Republican Party (RP) and the Movement for Genuine Democratic Change (MGODE)—both members of the Mgwirizano (Unity) Coalition—and the National Democratic Alliance (NDA) and the Alliance for Democracy (AFORD).

Cassim Chilumpha of the UDF was appointed as Vice President. Chilumpha, who was removed from his position as Finance Minister in November 2000 see p. [43837], had been arrested in February 2001 on charges of corruption [see p.

44038]. Goodall Gondwe, a former senior IMF official and non-party figure, was appointed as the new Finance Minister.

Note that Hetherwick Ntaba (NCD) at Health (misspelled in Keesings list) does not seem to be affiliated with a party in the legislature, so we aren't including him.

Political Handbook - In January 2004 a coalition of seven small parties, calling itself Mgwirizano (Unity), was launched to present Chakuamba as a joint presidential candidate. However, President Mutharika was reelected in balloting on May 20 with 35.9 percent of the vote, compared to 27.1 percent for Tembo (the MCP candidate) and 25.7 percent for Chakuamba. In concurrent legislative balloting, the MCP secured 60 seats, followed by the UDF with 49. Opposition parties and candidates challenged the legitimacy of the polling. However, Chakuamba withdrew his objections and accepted the post of minister of agriculture in the new Mutharika government, which also included the UDF, the National Democratic Alliance, the Mgwirizano coalition, and independents. Many independent legislators agreed to support the UDF in the assembly, some 23 of them subsequently joining the UDF. Additional realignments occurred after a dispute within the UDF prompted Mutharika to form a new party. As part of his anti-corruption campaign, the president dismissed 35 senior government officials between 2004 and 2006.

Africa South 2012- "Presidential elections took place on May 20 2004, and Mutharika was declared the winner. In concurrent parliamentary election UDF won 49 seats in the 193 legislature the MCP won the largest number of seats at 56 and the RP won 14 National Democratic Alliance – 8 and the AFORD won 6. Mutharika was sworn in on May 24 2004 and the UDF quickly secured a majority in parliament.

Announced: 13 June 2004 (SDNP election page)
Sworn in: 1 August 2004 (SDNP election page)

Political Handbook- Tensions between the president and individual government ministers led to four cabinet reshuffles in the period 2004–2008, with Mutharika assuming the portfolios of minister of agriculture and food security, and of education, science, and technology.

*The following two sites (Malawi SDNP and the Cablegate memo on the 2004 Cabinet) attribute respectively 1 or 2 seats to the AFORD. The SNDP website was used as the basis for party affiliation, as it has more detail and is affiliated with the government.

*Affiliation of Goodall Gondwe is uncertain in 2004. He was elected as an MP to Mzimba-North in 2009 as a member of the DPP, but prior to that there is some murkiness. Wikipedia claims that he belonged to the UDF before 2004, and then became a member of the DPP from 2005 until 2012 (unfortunately the citations are uninformative). I chose to code Gondwe as non-partisan, as Keesing's unequivocally calls him "a former senior IMF official and non-party figure."

Background:

“ general election held Aug 1987, MSM campaigned on coalition with PMSD and MLP, won 39 out of 60 elective seats, and 49.8% of votes, MMM formed the opposition coalition “Union” with the Mouvement des Travailleurs Democratiques and the Front des Tracailleurs Socialistes, they won 21 seats. In July 1990 MMM and MSM agreed to form an Alliance to contest general election”. “Jugnauth failed to secure the necessary parliamentary majority to changes to the constitution, these changes were opposed by the MLP. Jugnauth dismissed the deputy PM and leaders of MLP Sir Satcam Boolell and two other ministers of MSM, a further 3 ministers resigned, so only 1 minister of MLP was in gov.” (Africa South 1992)

“In an effort to strengthen his parliamentary position, Jugnauth in July 1990 concluded an electoral pact with the opposition MMM. In August, after the government narrowly failed to secure the 75 percent approval necessary to make the country a republic within the Commonwealth, Jugnauth dismissed the dissident ministers and announced that he would continue as head of a minority administration with the parliamentary support of the MMM. A month later the MMM formally joined the government, with its president, Dr. Prem NABABSINGH, named deputy prime minister.” (Political Handbook)

National Assembly elections on 15 September 1991; new government announced 27 September 1991 (http://www.ipu.org/parline-e/reports/arc/2209_91.htm)

“At an early election on September 15, 1991, the governing alliance won 59 of 62 legislative seats, far in excess of the 75 percent required to implement a change to republican status, which was approved by the Legislative Assembly on December 10, with effect from March 12, 1992. By agreement between the coalition's leading parties, Sir Veerasamy RINGADOO, who had been appointed governor general in January 1986, was designated nonexecutive president of the new republic for three months; he was succeeded on June 30 by the MMM's Cassam UTEEM.

In a cabinet reshuffle on August 18, 1993, Bérenger, who had been openly critical of government policies, was ousted as foreign minister. Two months later he was removed as MMM secretary general by the party's Political Bureau, which named Jean-Claude DE L'ESTRAC as his successor. However, the action was reversed on October 23 by the MMM Central Committee, which proceeded to name a new, pro-Bérenger party leadership. On November 16 Bérenger crossed the aisle to sit with the opposition, although he formally rejected the opposition leadership on the grounds that he had no electoral mandate for such a role. A year later Bérenger and De L'Estrac resigned as MPs; only the former regained his seat in by-elections in January 1995.” (Political Handbook)

“In Aug 1991 Jugnauth dissolved the legislative assembly. The ensuing general elections took place on the 15 of September, An alliance of the MSM, the MMM, the MTD won 57 seats out of 62. While the alliance of the MLP and PMSD won 3 seats. Members of the OPR had two seats. Juganuth formed a new gov which 9 representative of MMM and Berenger became Minister of External Affairs and one MTD was appointed. In late September Duval resigned and the following month the MLP/PMSD won 125 out of 126 seats. On Jun 30, 1992 Jugnauth resigned the presidency and Cassam Uteem became president with a minor cabinet reshuffle.” (Africa South 1993)

Political Handbook of the World 1998 (Arthur S. Banks, Alan J. Day, Thomas C. Muller) pp 600-601.

“The OPR captured two elective seats from Rodrigues Island at both the 1982 and 1983 balloting and, after having earlier indicated that it would support the MSM-Labour Alliance, was assigned one cabinet post in the Jugnauth government of August 1983 which it retained after the ensuing two elections. It again won Rodrigues' two elective parliamentary seats in 1995, despite its affiliation with the Jugnauth administration, and joined the resultant MLP-led government, although its customary full ministerial responsibility for Rodrigues affairs was downgraded to junior level under the prime minister. The OPR regained the full cabinet authority for Rodrigues affairs in the new government announced in July 1997.”

The Europa World Year Book (2012) entry for Mauritius further clarifies, explaining that “The removal of Bérenger from the Council of Ministers in August 1993, on the grounds that he had repeatedly criticized government policy, precipitated a serious crisis within the MMM, the political bureau of which decided that the other nine members of the party who held ministerial portfolios should remain in the coalition Government. Led by Nababsingh, the Deputy Prime Minister, and Jean-Claude de l’Estrac, the Minister of Industry and Industrial Technology, supporters of the pro-coalition faction announced in October 1993 that Bérenger had been suspended as Secretary-General of the MMM. Bérenger and his supporters responded by expelling 11 MMM officials from the party, and seeking a legal ban on Nababsingh and de l’Estrac from using the party name. The split in the MMM led in November to a government reorganization, in which the remaining two MMM ministers supporting Bérenger were replaced by members of the party’s pro-coalition faction” (p.3064).

Cabinet Code 17 (13 February 1995 – 20 Dec 1995)

Coalition government of MSM (12 portfolios, 29 leg seats), RMM (9 portfolios, 26 leg seats), PMSD (2 portfolios, 3 leg seats), MTD (1 portfolio, 2 leg seats), and OPR (1 portfolio, 2 leg seats).

“After the MLP had in January 1995 rebuffed Prime Minister Jugnauth's offer of power sharing, the PMSD agreed in early February to join the coalition, which then encompassed the MSM, MTD, OPR, and the Mauritian Militant Renaissance, despite opposition from a number of leading PMSD members, with a cabinet realignment following on February 13. The Creole opposition strongly opposed the amendment, which also provoked the withdrawal not only of the recently appointed PMSD members but also of the OPR representative, thus effectively shrinking the government coalition.” (Political Handbook)

“The by-elections held in Feb were won by MLP/MMM candidates and Berenger returned to the national assembly. Following the elections Luc Xavier Duval agreed to enter a coalition as minister of industry and industrial technology and min of tourism. The cabinet post of attorney-general and minister of justice was allocated to PMSD.” (Africa South 1996)

PM Jugnauth brings PMSD into cabinet after losing by-elections in January suggests weakness in the (MSM-RMM) governing coalition. Lists new ministers, with parties (no complete list) – Brings in 4 PMSD and 1 RMM, but total number of ministers unclear. (1995-02-01 MAURITIUS Keesing's Record of World Events (Formerly Keesing's Contemporary Archives 1931-1988) Volume 41 (1995), Issue No. 2 (February), Page 40397)

Europa World Year Book (2012) adds that after the MLP-MMM candidates won in February by-elections, "...Jugnauth opened political negotiations with the PMSD, the leader of which, Charles Gaëtan Xavier-Luc Duval (the son of Sir Gaëtan Duval), entered the coalition as Minister of Industry and Industrial Technology and Minister of Tourism. The post of Attorney-General and Minister of Justice was also allocated to the PMSD, and Sir Gaëtan Duval agreed to act as an economic adviser to the Prime Minister. As a result, however, of widespread opposition within the PMSD to participation in the coalition, Xavier-Luc Duval left the Government in October, and Sir Gaëtan Duval subsequently resumed the leadership of the party. The Minister for Rodrigues, representing the OPR, also left the Government" (p. 3065).

The Political Handbook of the World (2011) adds that the PMSD entered into the government coalition, which also included the MSM, MTD, and OPR, in early February, and the cabinet realignment took place on 13 February 1995. Controversy over a constitutional amendment pertaining to languages in the education system provoked Créole outrage, and led not only the newly appointed PMSD ministers, but also the OPR minister to withdraw from the government coalition (p. 920).

Cabinet Code 18: 30 Dec 1995 - 2 July 1997

Following legislative elections on 20 December 1995, coalition government forms between MLP (13 portfolios, 35 leg seats) and MMM (9 portfolios, 25 leg seats).
Total portfolios: 22 (Political Handbook)

Sources:

"In an outcome not dissimilar to Prime Minister Jugnauth's 1982 electoral victory, an opposition MLP-MMM alliance swept the legislative balloting of December 20, 1995, with the MLP's Dr. Navin RAMGOOLAM, son of former prime minister Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, forming a new government on December 31. It consisted of 13 MLP ministers, 9 MMM ministers (including Bérenger as deputy prime minister and foreign minister), and 1 OPR representative at the junior ministerial level. However, Bérenger was dismissed from the cabinet on June 20, 1997, and most of the other MMM ministers resigned their posts in protest. After reportedly failing to convince the PMSD to participate in the government, Ramgoolam on July 2 formed a new cabinet, which included only MLP ministers except for 1 OPR member and 1 independent (Dr. Ahmed Rashid BEEBEEJAUN, who had recently left the MMM rather than give up his portfolio for land transport, shipping, and public safety).” (Political Handbook)

“In November 1995 Jugnauth dissolved the national assembly and at the general elections of December the MLP/MMM alliance won, MMM- 25 seats and MLP- 35 SEATS. The OPR won 2 seats. Ramgoolam became PM of the new MLP/MMM coalition with Berenger as Deputy PM. Strains on the MLP/MMM coalition began in June 1996. Bheenick resigned and the finance portfolio was taken over by Ramgoolam until November. In June 1997 Berenger was dismissed and the MMM withdrew from the coalition, causing a new MLP cabinet to form. Berenger returned to government as minister of economic development and regional operations. (Africa South 1999)

“Paul Raymond Berenger, the Deputy Prime Minister, and Minister of Foreign Affairs and of International and Regional Co-operation, was dismissed from the government on June 21 by Prime Minister Navin Ramgoolam. The dismissal terminated the coalition between Berenger's Mauritius Militant Movement (MMM) and Ramgoolam's Labour Party (PTr), which had governed the country since the December 1995 elections [see p. 40854], and ended months of conflict between the two parties. Seven of the nine MMM ministers in Ramgoolam's Cabinet were reported to have resigned following Berenger's dismissal, and the eighth was expected to do so.” (1997-06-01 MAURITIUS Keesing's Record of World Events (Formerly Keesing's Contemporary Archives 1931-1988) Volume 43 (1997), Issue No. 6 (June), Page 41674

“On September 19 Jugnauth was unanimously reelected president by the assembly in balloting that had been postponed for a year. Prior to the assembly elections, Ramgoolan formed a new electoral coalition, the Alliance of the Future (Alliance de L'Avenir), that included the MLP, MSM, and the PMSD. The coalition secured a comfortable majority with 45 seats. The rival Alliance of the Heart (Alliance du Coeur) which included the MMM, the Mauritian Socialist Party (Parti Socialiste Mauricien—PSM), and the National Union (Union Nationale), received 20.

Ramgoolan was reappointed prime minister of a reshuffled cabinet that was sworn into office on May 11. The new cabinet also included 14 members from the MLP [note: in addition to the PM], 7 from the MSM, 2 from the PMSD, and 1 from the MR, which had not been part of the electoral coalition.

Monique Ohsan BELLEPEAU (MLP) was elected vice president by the National Assembly on November 11, 2010, to replace Angidi Verriah Chettiar, who died in office on September 15. She was the first female vice president of the country.

Ramgoolan dismissed Health Minister Santi Bai HANOOMANJEE (MSM) on July 26, 2011, following her arrest on corruption charges. That day, all MSM members of the cabinet resigned. They were replaced on August 7 by officials from other parties in the governing coalition.” ” (Political Handbook)

“Election to the National Assembly were held on May 5 2010 A recently formed alliance of Ramfoola, ’s MLP, the MSM and the PMSD, the Alliance de l’avenir secured 41 of the 62 directly elected seats while the Alliance du Coeur comprising the MMM and the MMSD and the UN won 18 seats the MR two seats and the Front solidary mauricienne one. 7 additional sects were allocated, 4 to the Alliance de l’avenir, two to the Alliance du Coeur and the on to the OPR. The MR joined the ruling coalition giving it the 2/3 majority required to adopt constitutional reformed promised during the electoral campaign. Ramgoolam retained the premiership and MAY 11 a new council of minister was sworn into office. Beebeejaun was reappointed as Deputy PM. While the PMSD leader Xavier-Luc Duval retained the position of Vice PM. Sithanen was excluded from the new government. The opposition UN was weaken in early 2011 when 11 senior members rejoined the MSM. Following a more comprehensive government reorganization effected in early Aug Jugnauth declared the MSM was entering the opposition, claiming it was forced out of the coalition. Xavier-Luc Duval was allocated Jugnauth former ministerial portfolio becoming Vice-PM and minister of finance and economic development. The government retained a narrow majority in the National Assembly.” [Cabinet list no parties] (Africa South 2012)

“The party alliance won the general elections held on 5 May 2010 and is the majority alliance and forms the government of Mauritius, where the largest party is the Labour Party, with 27 MPs in all and headed by Prime Minister Navin Ramgoolam and is followed by the Militant Socialist Movement with 14 MPs and is headed by Pravind Jugnauth who became Vice Prime Minister following the alliance.” (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Alliance_de_L'Avenir)

The reform process culminated in an August 1990 referendum that endorsed abandonment of the country's single-party system, and on January 20, 1991, the recently legalized Party of Democratic Convergence (Partido da Convergência Democrática—PCD) out-distanced the restyled MLSTP–Social Democratic Party (MLSTP–Partido Social Democrata—MLSPT-PSD) by winning 33 of 55 seats in the new National Assembly.

Africa South 1992- “ Jan 20th 1991 a legislative election took place and resulted in defeat for the ruling MLSTP-PSD which secured only 30.5% of the vote and 21 seats in the legislature. The PCD-GR obtained 54% of vote and 33 seats in the assembly and the CODO won 1.5% of the votes and failed to gain the last seat. In February 1991 a transitional gov was in place chaired by Daniel Daio.”

Political Handbook- After the MLSTP-PSD, ADI, and the Opposition Democratic Coalition (Coligação Democrática da Oposição—Codo) had signed a cooperation pact on December 29, 1995, MLSTP-PSD deputy secretary general Armindo Vaz de ALMEIDA on January 5, 1996, formed a cabinet that included seven members from the MLSTP-PSD, four from the ADI, and one from Codo, despite Codo's lack of legislative representation. In delayed first-round presidential balloting on June 30, 1996, incumbent president Trovoada led a five-man field with 40.9 percent of the vote, followed by former president Pinto da Costa (39.1 percent), the PCD's Alda BANDEIRA (14.6 percent), former prime minister da Graça, and Armindo TOMBA, an anticorruption journalist. In the runoff on July 21, Trovoada defeated Pinto da Costa on a 52–48 percent split.

On September 20, 1996, an assembly nonconfidence motion reportedly orchestrated by the assembly president, Fortunato PIRES, forced the resignation of the Almeida government. Subsequent MLSTP-PSD efforts to have Pires appointed to the vacant post were blocked, however, by Trovoada and the ADI, Political Handbook - In the assembly poll on March 3, 2002, the MLSTP-PSD secured a 1-seat plurality of 24 seats over the new electoral coalition formed by the PCD and the recently launched, pro-Menezes Democratic Movement of Forces for Change–Liberal Party (Movimento Democrático das Forças para da Mudunça–Partido Liberal—MDFM-PL). On March 26, the president appointed Gabriel COSTA (a former leader of the MLSTP-PSD but now an independent described as “close” to the MDFM–PL) as the new prime minister. The cabinet that took office in April contained, according to the previously determined proportion, members of the MLSTP-PSD, the coalition of the MDFM-PL and the PCD, and the new Uê Kédadji alliance that had been formed by the ADI, Codo, and others prior to the assembly poll, at which the alliance had captured third place with 8 seats. Following a dispute between Prime Minister Costa and Defense Minister Victor MONTEIRO, President Menezes dismissed Costa and the rest of the cabinet on September 27, 2002. On October 3 the president appointed Maria das NEVES de Souza (MLSTP-PSD) as the new prime minister.

Africa South 2003- However in Feb 2002 trovoadá resigned from his post citing a lack of confidence in President de Menezes. In early November the MLSTP –PSD boycotted the Assembleia Nacional and urged president de Meneze to restore constitutional order. Legislative elections were held March 3 2002 where the MLSTP-PSD won 24 seats and an alliance of the MDFM and the PCD secured 23 and the Ue (an alliance comprising the ADI and 4 smaller parties) obtained only 8 seats. Gabriel da Costa was appointed as PM. Following legislative elections, a coalition government forms on May 11, 1994, comprising the ANC (21 portfolios), NP (6 portfolios), and IFP (3 portfolios), plus one independent. Government ends when NP withdraws.

Total portfolios: 30 on Sep 1994 (including president (really a PM position, ANC) and 2 VPs, 1 ANC and 1 NP) (ASoS 1995, p. 863)

Political Handbook - Its constituent elements at first presented a united front against the constitutional settlement, although a January 1994 decision in favor of electoral participation by the Ciskei government (originally a Freedom Alliance member) was a serious setback.

The situation was transformed in March 1994 when the AWB and other Afrikaner paramilitaries, apparently sanctioned by the AVF, tried to protect the Bophuthatswana government of Chief Lucas MANGOPE (a Freedom Alliance member) from ANC-led protests against his decision to boycott the elections.

The IFP's participation ensured that South Africa's first multiracial balloting, to be held April 26–29, 1994, would be relatively free of violence. According to the Independent Electoral Commission and numerous foreign observers, the election was in the main conducted fairly. As expected, the ANC registered an overwhelming victory in the national contest, winning 252 of 400 seats in the new National Assembly, against 82 for the NP, 43 for the IFP, 9 for the VF, and 14 for three smaller parties. In simultaneous polls for new provincial assemblies, the ANC won majorities in seven provinces, losing only Western Cape (to the NP) and KwaZulu-Natal (to the IFP).

Elected president by unanimous vote of the new assembly on May 9, 1994, Nelson Mandela was sworn in the following day. Under the terms of the constitutional settlement, the ANC's Thabo MBEKI became first deputy president and de Klerk second deputy president. The new cabinet installed on May 11 contained 19 ANC representatives, 5 from the NP, and 3 from the IFP (including Chief Buthelezi as home affairs minister). The new Senate, its members designated by the newly elected provincial assemblies, convened on May 20, with the ANC holding 60 of 90 seats.

Africa South 1995 – “On May 9, 1994, the interim parliament elected Mandela as President, De Klerk and Mbeki became deputy presidents. The former finance minister Derek Keys was reappointed to that position and Buthelezi became min of internal affairs.”

Africa South 1999- “ Local elections took place May 1996 with the NP increasing its share of votes cast and the election in KwaZulu/Natal took place relatively peacefully in June. The IFP won 44.% of the vote although the support of ANC increased. On May 1996 the parliament approved the final version of the constitution with the NP voting in favor.

On “11 May, a coalition Government of national unity was announced, ministerial membership of the Cabinet (18 ANC portfolios, six for the NP and three for the IFP) being based on the provision that each party winning at least 5% of the national vote would be entitled to one or more Cabinet portfolios, in proportion to the number of seats held by it.” (http://www.ipu.org/parline-e/reports/arc/2291_94.htm)

According to the EuropaWorld Year Book (2012) a “Cabinet of National Unity” including 18 members of the ANC, 6 from the NP, and 3 from the IFP was formed sometime following Mandela’s official inauguration on 10 May 1994. IPU-Parline confirms this breakdown of ministerial portfolios; The Political Handbook of the World (2011) instead claims that the ANC received 19, the NP 5, and the IFP 3. Keesing’s Record of World Events (Volume 40, May, 1994 South Africa, Page 39990) lists the cabinet (names, portfolios, and parties); note that the ANC includes one minister without portfolio. Reynolds (1999, p. XX) confirms that there were 6 ministerial portfolios in addition to the Executive Deputy President. The ANC is credited with 19 portfolios, in addition to one Executive Deputy President and one President. The IFP total is consistently 3 across all sources.

Notes: The Interim Constitution has requirements pertaining to the formation of the cabinet. Any party receiving at least 20 seats in the National Assembly was entitled to a proportional number of ministerial portfolios (Section 88). All three parties meeting this criterion elected to participate in the “Government of National Unity.” Keesing’s (Volume 40, May, 1994 South Africa, Page 39990) also references these requirements.

Cabinet Code 26: 30 June 1996 – 2 June 1999

Following NP withdrawal from government on 30 June 1996, new cabinet comprises ANC (24 portfolios) and IFP (3 portfolios). Govt ends with legislative elections. Total portfolios: 27 on Sep 1996 (including president (really a PM position, ANC) and 1 VP, ANC) (ASoS 1997, pp. 910-11)

Sources:

Political Handbook - Two days after the endorsement of the new constitution in Parliament, de Klerk announced on May 10, 1996, that the NP was withdrawing from the government of national unity with effect from June 30. He cited the diminishing influence of the NP on government policy, the refusal of the ANC to include power-sharing arrangements in the new constitution, and the need for an effective opposition. Commentators considered that the decision was motivated by a desire to assert the NP's independence well in advance of legislative elections in 1999. The party subsequently also withdrew from all provincial governments except that of Western Cape, where it was in the majority. President Mandela appointed ANC members to replace the outgoing NP ministers and abolished the post of second deputy president vacated by de Klerk.

In December 1997, President Mandela had resigned as ANC president and was succeeded, as expected, by Thabo Mbeki, who led the ANC into the June 2, 1999, national elections. The ANC emerged from the balloting with 266 National Assembly seats, one short of the two-thirds majority needed to amend the constitution, prompting party leaders to quickly negotiate a coalition with the Minority Front (MF), an Indian party that had won a single seat. On June 14 the National Assembly unanimously elected Mbeki as president, and he took the oath of office two days later. On June 17 the new president named ANC deputy leader Jacob ZUMA as deputy president and appointed a cabinet in which Chief Buthelezi retained his position as home affairs minister.

Africa South 1999- The IFP withdrew from the constitutional assembly. The new constitution was ratified on Dec 10 1996 and went in place Feb 4, 1996, after which the NP announced it would withdraw from government, after which the NP portfolios were given to ANC. Mandela announced he would resign from the ANC and not seek another term as president in 1997, he resigned Dec 1997 and succeeded by Mbeki.”

NP withdrew from the government sometime after the May 1996 version of the constitution was approved; Europa (2012) asserts that “De Klerk subsequently announced that the NP was to withdraw from the Government of National Unity, attributing the decision to the diminishing influence of his party on government policy, the refusal of the ANC to include power-sharing arrangements in the new Constitution, and the necessity, in the interests of democracy, for an effective opposition. The NP later withdrew from all Provincial Governments except for that of Western Cape (where it was in the majority). Mandela appointed members of his own party to the ministerial portfolios vacated by NP members and abolished the position of Second Deputy President” (4124). I rely on the Keesing’s Record of World Events (Volume 40, May, 1994 South Africa, Page 39990) list that includes names, parties, and portfolios. I add an extra ministerial portfolio for the NP, as the text of the Keesing’s record and IPU-Parline suggest that there should be 6 ministerial portfolios, in addition to one Executive Deputy President and Reynolds (1999) confirms this count.

Cabinet Code 27: 17 Jun 1999 – 14 Apr 2004

Following legislative elections, new cabinet announced 17 June 1999 comprising ANC (26 portfolios) and IFP (3 portfolios). Govt ends with legislative elections.

Total portfolios: 29 on Sep 1999 (including president (really a PM position, ANC) and 1 VP, ANC) (ASoS 2000, pp. 1020-21)

Sources:

Political Handbook - In the June 1999 balloting, the dominance of the ANC was evident not only at the national level but also in the provinces, where it retained outright majorities in seven, formed a coalition government with the IFP in KwaZulu-Natal, and won a plurality in Western Cape. In the national balloting, the Democratic Party (DP), led by Tony LEON, displaced the NP (subsequently reconstituted as the New National Party [NNP]) as the leading opposition formation, winning 38 seats (up from 7 in 1994), while the NNP managed only 28, a net loss of 54. Facing diminished prospects, in June 2000 the NNP joined the DP in forming a Democratic Alliance (DA), the expectation being that a full merger of the parties would eventually occur. The DA surprised many observers by winning 23 percent of the national vote in the December municipal elections, but policy and leadership clashes ultimately led the NNP to part ways with the DP in October 2001. In abandoning the DA for a closer relationship with the ANC, the NNP's van Schalkwyk noted that the two erstwhile antagonists no longer had significant ideological differences. Thus, at the end of 2001 the only opposition formations with more than a handful of National Assembly members were the rump DA (the DP plus the small Federal Alliance) and the United Democratic Movement

Africa South 2000- “ On June 2 1999 elections occurred and the ANC won 266 seats, almost having a 2/3rds majority in the national assembly the NNP won 28 seats and the DP won 38 seats. In the Western Cape no party won a majority of the seats and the NP and DP formed a coalition to prevent the ANC from gaining power. The IFP reached an agreement with eh ANC which allowed it continued control over the KwaZulu/Natal province. At the national level the IFP won 34 seats and entered in a coalition with the ANC and Buthelezi remained minister of home affairs. As a result of the coalition the ANC achieved the 2/3s majority and Jacob Zuma became deputy president. The UDM wins 14 seats. June 16, 1999 Mbeki became president and announced a new cabinet.”

According to Europa (2012) and The Political Handbook of the World (2011), the IFP and the ANC remained in a coalition government, and Chief Buthelezi (IFP) retained his portfolio as Minister of Home Affairs; Zuma became the Executive Deputy President. Mbeki describes the changes made to the cabinet as a “reshuffle” (Keesing’s Record of World Events, Volume 45, June, 1999 South Africa, Page 42980). A full list including names, parties, and portfolios is given in the Appendix (p.217-218) of Reynolds (1999). There are a total of 29 ministers in the cabinet; 26 for the ANC and 3 for the IFP.

Cabinet Code 28: 28 Apr 2004 – Sep 2008

On April 28, new government (with President Mbeki as ‘PM’) is announced, comprising ANC (26 portfolios), AZAPO (Azanian People’s Organization, 1 portfolio), NNP (New National Party, 1 portfolio), and SACP (South African Communist Party, 1 portfolio). Note that SACP doesn’t have any legislative seats, so in some sense this minister can be thought of as an independent. Govt ends with Mbeki’s resignation.

Total portfolios: 29 on Aug 2004 (including president (really a PM position, ANC) (ASoS 2005, pp. 1020-21)

Sources:

Political Handbook - In the elections to the National Assembly and the provincial councils on April 14, 2004, the ANC emerged as the dominant party, winning 279 of the 400 National Assembly seats with 69.7 percent of the vote. The ANC also took control of seven of the nine provincial assemblies and nominated premiers to head all nine provincial governments. Political Handbook - On April 23, President Mbeki was reelected by the National Assembly for a second term. Members of the NNP and Azapo were included in the subsequent cabinet, as were members of the SACP. On August 7 Marthinus VAN SCHALKWYK announced the dissolution of the NNP, asked its members to join the ANC (as van Schalkwyk and some of his colleagues had, former president de Klerk being a notable exception), and agreed to contest all future elections under the ANC banner. In June former president Nelson Mandela officially retired from public life. In local elections on March 1, 2006, the ANC was unseated in Cape Town where Helen ZILLE of the DA became mayor of the only opposition-controlled city in the country.

Africa South 2012- “ Legislative elections occurred on April 2004, the ANC won 279 seats, the DA took 50 and the IFP won 28. For the first time the ANC won control of all nine provincial governments. On April 23 the new national assembly voted unanimously to re-elect Mbeki to the presidency and he was sworn in on April 27. He reshuffled the cabinet retaining Zuma as the Deputy President and Tshababhlala-Msimang as minister of health. Van Schalkwyk was appointed minister of environmental affairs and tourism. Local elections occurred March 2006 with no clear winner for Cape Town. Mbeki was reelected as the Deputy President. Mbeki appointed Phumzile Mlambo-Nguke to the minister of energy and mineral affairs. In September 2007 Mbeki dismissed the NDPP.

Mbeki resigned in September and on September 25 Kgalema Motlanthe was sworn in as president. However the courts over turned this action.

Africa South 2012- Legislative elections occurred on April 22 2009 in which the ANC won an overwhelming victory, Cope won 7.4% of the vote and DA won 16.7% of the votes. Zuma was inaugurated as President on May 9 2009 and the next day he organized is government and reorganized the number of ministries, the ministry of education was divided into the min of basic ed and min of higher ed. Motlanthe became deputy president, Pravin Gordhan became min of finance and Jeff Radebe became min of justice and constitutional development, Nkosazana Dlamini-Zuma became min of home affairs. Local elections occurred in May 2011 and the DA secured 24% of the votes and won control over Cape Town.” Cabinet list no parties

Announced: 28 April 2004 (Keesing’s Record of World Events, Volume 50, April, 2004 South Africa, Page 45936)

Europa (2012) notes that “the Cabinet included most senior members of the previous administration: Zuma was reappointed Deputy President” (4125). Keesing’s (Volume 50, April, 2004 South Africa, Page 45936) gives a list of the full cabinet, including names, portfolios, and parties. I do not count Charles Nqakula, the “Parliamentary Counsellor to the President,” as a minister: In a subsequent Keesing’s entry (Volume 45, August, 1999 South Africa, Page 43092), a description of administrative merging of the President and Deputy President staff lists this post, so I consider it to be excluded from the ranks of full minister.

Notes: The NNP and the DP allied to form the DA in June 2000; Keesing’s Record of World Events states that Tony Leon headed the DA and van Schalkwyk was Deputy. The NNP and DP were not, however, to officially disband until after the 2004 elections (Volume 46, June, 2000 South Africa, Page 43608). Van Schalkwyk then dissolved the NNP and asked members to join the ANC on 7 August 2004 (Europa 2012). For more information about the disbanding of the NNP and the means by which it was subsumed under the ANC banner, see Keesing’s Record of World Events Volume 50, August, 2004 South Africa, Page 46146.
